Predictive Services Discussion: Very hot and dry weather is on tap this week in the West, with record heat in some areas. Gusty winds are expected in some of the southern California mountains the next few days, as well as over portions of Montana today. Thunderstorm activity is expected to increase in Arizona and western New Mexico starting around Wednesday, with the threat of thunderstorms for northern California starting around Thursday. In the Alaska interior, scattered thunderstorms are expected today mainly in the south along with gusty winds. A warming and drying trend is expected this week along with a chance of thunderstorms. The Southeast will see scattered thundershowers the next few days.
