Predictive Services Discussion: With the strong, hot upper level ridge of high pressure, remaining anchored over the East, the southerly flow along its western edge will continue to draw tropical moisture into Texas, New Mexico, and Colorado. Further north and west, a late season stream of monsoonal moisture will move into the Great Basin and possibly eastern Oregon, creating widely scattered showers and storms. Temperatures across the Pacific Northwest will begin to cool as another trough and front approach from the Gulf of Alaska. Weak high pressure ridging over the northern Great Plains will keep the area north of Nebraska warm and dry.

LEAD Time

Bias for Action

Leadership Category

Leaders in the wildland fire service are not only empowered but also duty-bound to act on a situation that is within our power to affect, even without direction from above.

This empowerment is not intended to encourage freelancing. In a high-risk environment, freelancing is a dangerous and unpredictable element, causing more harm than good. Ultimately, leaders are always accountable for their actions.

- A bias for action acknowledges wildfire as an environment where events do not always go according to plan.
- At times during an incident, one person may be the only one in a position to see what needs to be done and to make it happen.
- Time may not permit gathering all of the information that one might like to have; if you wait until you have all the facts to be 100% sure, it will almost always be too late.

In these time-critical situations, fire leaders use judgment, act within the intent of their leaders, work in unison with others, develop and communicate a plan, and then inform leaders of actions as soon as safely possible.

On a chaotic and rapidly developing wildfire, one person taking the initiative can make all the difference in seizing and taking advantage of an opportunity. Being hesitant, risk-averse, or indecisive can expose firefighters to greater long-term risks and translate into a waste of time, opportunity, energy, and money.

Discussion Points

- Discuss the difference between freelancing and a bias for action.
- Discuss instances of taking appropriate action and indecisiveness/non-action.
- How are some ways we train for situations requiring a bias for action?
