Predictive Services Discussion: Upper-level troughing will move over the Intermountain West into the northern Plains with ridging forecast for the Mississippi River Valley and Great Lakes. A weakening trough will extend from the northern Great Lakes into the Southeast coast while upper ridging continues across New England. A cold front will move through the northern Plains into the western Great Lakes and into the southern Plains. Elevated to critical conditions are forecast across the eastern Colorado, eastern New Mexico, and the central and southern Plains. Gusty post-frontal west to northwest winds are also likely across much of the Intermountain West into Montana, Wyoming, and the western Dakotas but will be accompanied by cool temperatures and high relative humidity. Showers with isolated thunderstorms are expected over the eastern Great Basin into the Rockies, northern Plains, and Minnesota with snow above 7,000 feet. Showers will move into western Washington and northwest Oregon during the day while scattered showers and isolated thunderstorms develop across the Mid-Atlantic, Carolinas, and southern Florida.
