Otherwise, changes in agency YTD fires and acres reflect more accurate mapping or reporting adjustments.

Predictive Services Discussion:

An upper low will bring widespread showers, with snow above 6,000 to 8,000 feet, to much of the Southwest, southern Great Basin, and Colorado Rockies through early next week. Offshore winds in California will become light, but dry conditions will continue there through early next week as well. High pressure aloft will bring above normal temperatures to the northern half of the West this weekend through mid-next week. A slow-moving cold front will bring widespread moderate to heavy rain to south and central Texas and the Gulf Coast this weekend, while lighter precipitation, with a period of drier conditions to the southern Appalachians and Southeast through mid-next week. Fast-moving cold fronts are expected for the Great Lakes, Northeast, and Mid-Atlantic keeping temperatures near to below normal, but any precipitation will be light. Late next week, Pacific storms will begin to affect the northwestern US, but much of the northern Plains into the northern Great Lakes will remain dry. A warming trend is forecast for much of Alaska the next week, especially the western Interior, while relatively dry trade winds are forecast for Hawai'i through mid-next week.
